

People and Congress have a right to see what the Justice Department is concealing

by Washington Examiner |

Federal prosecutors are upset that Congress, whose job literally includes oversight of the Justice Department and FBI, want DOJ to “open our doors.”

Political interference in an investigation is a threat, and Congress needs to be careful to avoid that. But that doesn’t justify stonewalling of Congress by the FBI, the DOJ, and the special prosecutor. Congress, elected by the people, has oversight authority over these executive agencies, and it’s dangerous when
