Google Drops "Don't Be Evil" Motto From Its Code Of Conduct

google dont be evil

Image: Flickr/tangi bertin

In 2015, when Google reorganized itself under Alphabet, the new parent company drafted a new motto for itself — "Do the right thing." However, Google's own unofficial motto remained "Don't be evil." The company kept it as a part of the corporate code of conduct since 2000.

In the latest development, Gizmodo has uncovered that Google has dropped the "Don't be evil" phrase from its Code of Conduct. As per the findings, the updated version of the web page, which was first archived by the Wayback Machine, has a significant change.