

NOT VERY APPY

Google and Apple selling creepy apps that let your lover spy on you, monitor your calls and search your internet history

The apps are marketed towards worried parents but reviews have revealed people are using them to track their partners without their knowledge

By Brittany Vonow

CREEPY apps that let your lover spy on you - including monitor your calls and text messages - are being sold on smartphones.

The apps, which can easily be bought on Apple and Google Play, can even help someone track a person's phone and search their Internet history.

 Software has been developed that allows a phone's text messages and movements to be tracked

Getty - Contributor

5

Software has been developed that allows a phone's text messages and movements to be tracked

Get the best Sun stories with our daily Sun10 newsletter

Your information will be used in accordance with our privacy policy.

Enter your email address |

Although the programs - including mSpy and Text, Message, Notification, Location Remote Spy, are marketed towards parents keeping track of their children, reviews have revealed people are using them to track their partners.

In one disturbing review for the software, which can be bought for £20 a month, a person wrote: "I think this is the most useful app out there right now it is so easy to use an my girlfriend didn't even know."

Another added: "This app is incredibly useful and does everything its supposed to do.

"I was able to see everything my boyfriend had been hiding from me and because he let's me on his fone all the time it was so easy.

 People have claimed in reviews for Text, Message, Notification, Location Remote Spy to be tracking their partners

5

People have claimed in reviews for Text, Message, Notification, Location Remote Spy to be tracking their partners

 Another user said they had managed to check in on their partner

5

Another user said they had managed to check in on their partner

 Reviews for mSpy were also shared, showing people used it to check their partner's phone

5

Reviews for mSpy were also shared, showing people used it to check their partner's phone

"Everyone should get this app especially if you have a kid or significant other you suspect is being unfaithful. It saved me a lot of heartache and pain. Thank you for actually helping me."

mSpy, which costs up to £14.99 a year, boasts that it can help parents "monitor text messages, calls, current GPS location, Snapchat, WhatsApp and much more".

But in one review, a user claimed: "In those 3 days I found out my significant other was in fact cheating on me.... The app was actually able to obtain DELETED WhatsApp notes."

The app's website includes a disclaimer, saying it is a violation to install the software onto a device you do not own.

 Downloading the software on a phone without a person's knowledge is illegal

Getty - Contributor

5

Downloading the software on a phone without a person's knowledge is illegal

Accessing a computer device without someone's permission is an offence under the Police and Justice Act and can carry a two-year prison sentence.

Fine Line Labs, who run Text, Message, Notification, Location Remote Spy, said the app was used for parental or employer use.

They said the only way someone could install the app on a person's phone was to unlock it, and install the monitoring software.

A spokesperson added: "Both situations (unlocking and reading your personal information, and unlocking to install software) are illegal, so we trust that law abiding people will use our app legally.

"For a thief who steals a device to gain access to it, that is entirely separate from our app and the apps intended purposes."

Google's policies include prohibiting Surveillance and Commercial Spyware apps being sold on the Play store.