David Hogg, Crisis Actor, forgets his lines

That sound you heard was the sound of the media's narrative balloon popping. It turns out that David "Camera" Hogg, who totally is not a crisis actor and absolutely does not play a student who survived a mass shooting at his school in Florida:

First take: On the day of the shooting, I got my camera and got on my bike and rode as fast as I could three miles from my house to the school to get as much video and to get as many interviews as I could because I knew that this could not be another mass shooting.

Second take: When Hogg heard a “pop” while sitting in an AP environmental science class around 2:30 p.m. Wednesday, he told his teacher it sounded strangely like a gunshot. But there had been a fire drill that very morning and talk of a “Code Red” exercise to prepare for an active shooter. This must just be a surprise drill, he reasoned. And then the fire alarm sounded. Dutifully acting on it, Hogg and other students tried to exit the building. A janitor—Hogg doesn’t know his name but calls him an angel—knew where the shots were coming from and sent the students back. Then a culinary arts teacher, Ashley Kurth, pulled Hogg and others inside, locked the door, and made them hide in a closet. Checking Twitter and Instagram, Hogg—who’s an editor at the school’s TV station—found the news that the shooting was real and ongoing.

When Camera Hogg says that he isn't a crisis actor, it's entirely possible that he's telling the truth. Because he is so haplessly bad at it that it wouldn't surprise me if he's been fired from the job.

Face it, the whole thing is fake. Again. The Parkland drama was just another obvious false flag meant to drum up public support for gun control, complete with fake survivors who weren't even on the scene at the time. That's why Big Social and the mainstream media reacted so strongly to the correct observations that these kids are fakes and crisis actors, because they are desperate to retain their ability to create a false narrative.

UPDATE: The full transcript has Hogg claiming to have been at the school, going home, then going back again in order to film and perform for the cameras. Of course, we have not actually been presented with any evidence of his actually having been there earlier. And more importantly, if Hogg went home and got his camera AFTER the shooting, then how did he have it in the closet DURING the shooting.

As I always point out after these staged TV dramas, the one thing we absolutely know did not happen is whatever the media's current Official Story is. If you're dubious about this, if you actually take their reports at face value, allow me to direct your attention to the recent news that the father of the Pulse shooter was an FBI informant for 11 years. Are you noticing the pattern yet?

If you were still allowed on twitter... The responses on people posting this were that he went home after the shooting, then left his house on his bike to get back there that afternoon to do his job as viral creator of videos because all he wants is fame.

Some think this was drummed up to further discredit influencers as debunked conspiracy theorists by laying a Hogg Trap.

Can't find the picture at the moment, but someone found the transcript for what CBS edited out. So the question: is CBS intentionally trying to make Fake News to get a response? (News Media is still filled with incompetents, so not everything is intentional. Though you can't assume as such.)

Found the explanation:

https://twitter.com/ed_grimly/status/978439328937332736

CBS basically created a strawman that would, rightly, be attacked.

Terrorist attacks can be averted by issuing FBI agents with condoms. It's an inter-generational thing.

4. VD

CBS basically created a strawman that would, rightly, be attacked.

I would tend to assume by accident here. Because, if you think about it, what would be the point of doing so intentionally? All this does is raise the question of where there is any evidence that David Hogg was at the school earlier that day? We're supposed to take the word of a kid who, at best, is a complete camera whore at this point?

But if they're intentionally trying to give themselves the ability to point and cry "fake news", then what does that tell you about the relative weakness of their position?

This instance might actually be unintentional, but they create so many strawmen to push discussion off-topic that I would assume intention, as a first step. If someone viewed Hogg as no longer useful, and possibly a problem, Gaslighting him makes sense. Makes another rabbit trail to get people lost in.

Twitter loved to do this by making changes to trending topic auto-completes so topics got split up. Creates a diversion while burning out a player that's no longer useful.

Related to the update, has anyone else noticed you can almost instantly tell when a big issue is not related to the Swamp? The Austin Bombing campaign is a good example. The news was barely making national headlines, the Police were giving regular & useful updates, local authorities weren't trying to induce panic and they tracked the bomber down as fast as they could.

Compare that with Parkland. The bodies weren't even cold and they were already on the Anti-2A push. Completely different approach, discussion and narrative.

The Pulse shooting was out of the National News in under 48 hours. The instant it was "Possibly Gay Muslim kills Gays", they memoryholed it. Heck, they were memoryholing it while it was happening on Reddit.

Forensics are pretty good. It is remarkable what can be recreated from trace evidence. The fact that they have been so brazen with speedy conclusions and destruction of all evidence suggests that they are desperate, or still playing scripts written for Hillary.

Speaking of which, any thoughts on the theory Trumps expulsion of Russian spies is amplification of the Putin menace leading up to Uranium One? It's not unconnected.

Just wondering why/how anyone was allowed to leave the school and then return again like it was no biggie to grab his ride and cruise outta dodge.

I was in high school over 20 years ago. Security was more lax and kids could come and go with fewer restrictions, but when a major problem happened, parents were called and no one left without someone signing them out.

So I'll remain highly skeptical for many reasons

I didn't watch Hogg's closet video but I recall descriptions of it being rather creepy and that he was feeding lines to the other kids. There may have been some intention on CBS part to avoid talking about it since it does conflict with the 'galvanized by the shooting' narrative if he's always been an attention whore. The slip up was probably unintentional as the writer/editor knew what they wanted to present and obscure, and didn't realize that an unbiased viewer would come up with the impression he wasn't at the school not just that he didn't make the closet video.

Trump plays Foreign Policy really, really close to the vest. Considering the State Department has likely been all but removed from much of its old function & power, that isn't too surprising. Everything has a deliberate purpose, even if it's not directly observable. Domestic Policy is a lot more straight forward, simply because we have a lot more information from which to work.

U1 is definitely the "issue" that can unwind much of the Swamp. Pretty much everyone that touched it is incredibly guilty of many thing.

My first impression of these kids in the pose brigade was that these were people not ever for even one moment in any actual danger of being shot. They don't seem to be behaving like what I reasonably imagine it would be like to be their age and in the immediate presence of a crazed maniac who was shooting at people near you with absolute indifference to who the victims were and you are next. It seems a young survivor would be either too stunned for words, historically crying nonstop, or absolutely euphoric.

If true, their experience (or lack of it) provides no special value to the "conversation about guns." In fact, it's less than zero value, as it's harmful to the rest of us in its absurdity.

These kids being hand picked for their roles, and the best they could come up with is an arrogant, pencil-necked Hitler youth and a Marxist lesbian with a shaved head. You would think they would come up with more sympathetic puppets to dance in front of the few members of the public that haven't dug in to one side or the other of the gun debate by now. Those people are relatively normal. Those are the people who wanted to be sympathetic to Black Lives Matter until they were put off by the riots and blocked ambulances. These activists and government handlers really suck at putting on a convincing show, probably because they despise the public they are trying to manipulate.

This was my same immediate thought. Nothing they say has the ring of authenticity to it. The leftists give away the game immediately though. The mildest criticism of these kids elicits over the top reactions from them. I got banned from a smaller discussion group for just posting the Hogg as a Hitler meme there. The excuse was I was picking on a "child". Even though this 17 year old "child" thrust himself into the national spotlight to push a blatant political agenda.

"But if Hogg went home and got his camera AFTER the shooting, as he clearly states, then how could he have had it in the school closet DURING the shooting?"

he didn't go home to get his camera. he went home because they told all the kids to go home and or his dad came and got him.

Then he got on his back and went back. Look at the timeline in the transcript. Its the afternoon. After the shooting when he is going home. Its the transcript of what happened between about 5pm and 11pm.

and... if you're correct and its an actual screw up... then they got lucky because it the explanation that I just gave is a believable one.

Hell I hate the little bastard and I find the explanation believable. He says he wanted to go back to get some b-roll. B-roll is alternative or supplemental footage... suggesting he already had the main footage.

This isn't the smoking gun. or if it is... its unfortunate because it will not be recognized as such.

Of course. But his wording makes it clear that he did NOT have the camera previously, at the school, assuming that he ever was at the school.

I'm not saying this will convince anyone else. But it is sufficient to convince me. As an editor, I have learned that word choices are far more significant than most people realize. I learn far more about my writers and their psyches than I would prefer simply by reading their unedited work.

more important is the ludicrousness of even the revised, "sensical" time line.

1 - Hogg is trapped in a closing, doing ad hoc interviews with his classmates

2 - the police evacuate Hogg's classroom ... and permit him to leave without taking his witness testimony?

possible. parents are going to be frantic in a situation like this and po-po are going to be more interested in getting them calmed down than in investigating the crime.

3 - he rides 3 miles home, gets his 'quality' camera and rides 3 miles back.

now you're talking about a minimum of 1/2 an hour and more likely an hour round trip.

4 - he returns to ... a mass murder crime scene? with police crawling all over it? and the po-po just let him wander around taking pictures?

i dunno. i haven't paid much attention to Camera Hogg. but there'd better damn well not be any 'quality' video from inside the school(since we now know that he didn't have his 'quality' camera until well after the school had been locked down and secured) , or not points to further collusion between Hogg and the authorities.
