The only reason to not use a paper ballot and require voter ID is corruption and voter fraud.

I think the solution might be a combination. Maybe block chain, publically available and verifiable verification of paper ballots

No system is perfect, however it is much more difficult, from man power, logistics, and coordination perspectives, to fabricate millions of fake paper votes than electronic votes in any election.

It'd be a step in the right direction certainly. But don't get your hopes up and make a bigger deal out of this than it is. Even when paper ballots are used they are counted by machine, these machines are just as insecure and have just as little oversight as electronic voting machines. Making them a prime target for any number of exploits. Many of them are older or provided by Soros backed firms. In theory paper ballots at least give you the option of a manual recount but recent events have shown just how easy it is to destroy them with no repercussions. It just gets swept out of the torrent of news with nothing but impotent outrage by voters.

Ideally I'd like a system where verified American citizens can vote electronically on open source and thoroughly audited machines, print a paper receipt where they keep one copy and the state keeps another, it is all recorded in blockchain, and each citizen has a method to go online and check that their vote has been recorded correctly. However it can't happen unless we make it a priority as a nation and certain parties have too much to lose if they risk a fair and verifiable election to let it.

Funny how the push to end all paper ballots came out of Florida when Jeb! was Governor and his faggot traitor brother was President...

I'm sure that is just a coincidence.
