

California Gov't Caught Building Housing on Contaminated Nuclear Test Sites

As a city prepares to spend $8 billion building government housing, the $1 billion it paid contractors to clean up the contamination from the former nuclear test site, appears to have been wasted.

By Rachel Blevins -

Facebook

Twitter

Google+

Pinterest

As the city of San Francisco attempts to build new government housing on a former nuclear test site, an investigation has revealed that the contractors who were supposed to clean up the area intentionally botched the work, even going as far as to swap soil samples from contaminated sites with clean ones.