Another big factor as to why San Francisco sucks is that these trends don't seem to be reversing. Rather than taking any steps to house the homeless, or to address the epidemic of addiction that underlies their destitution, city officials kick the can down the road.

Here's why: Nothing works. Transit, government, housing, culture. SF has a wealth of resources and really can't get it together. I'm liberal and love what the city represents, but in practice, everything is a near miss. The homelessness. It's rampant, it's sad and it's unsafe, both for those on the street or those living in SF.

It's packed, and transit sucks, but you accept it. Maybe it's apathy or maybe not, I'm not sure, but you do get over the hatred. Or maybe you just really loved the way San Diego was, and there really aren't too many comparisons to make between the two cities, so if you're looking for an SD experience, you may just be in the wrong city.
