

DNC Healthline Website Says the Term vagina Is No Longer Gender Inclusive Will Start Using Front Hole Instead

 Jim Hoft by Jim Hoft Comments

1.2K Share

76 Tweet

Email

This is your brain on liberalism.

Healthline is one of the most trafficked websites in the United States. As of Aug 2018, it had a global ranking by Alexa of 614 and a United States ranking of 237.

This much respected online health journal announced a major shift this week in an attempt to be more inclusive to the LGBTQIA community.

From now on “front hole” will be used on the site instead of “vagina” so that some nutcase who identifies as a teapot or a rake will feel included.

Women are reduced to front holes.

Caldronpoll.com reported:

Healthline has claimed health disparities and higher rates of HIV and STIs observed in LGBTQIA communities are due to discrimination in the sex ed world. So, the California based health information provider has adopted the gender-inclusive term “front hole” in place of the medical term, “vagina” in their latest LGBTQIA safe sex guide.

“For the purpose of this guide, we’ll refer to the vagina as the ‘front hole’ instead of solely using the medical term ‘vagina,’” the document explains. “This is gender-inclusive language that’s considerate of the fact that some trans people don’t identify with the labels the medical community attaches to their genitals.”

“For example, some trans and nonbinary-identified people assigned female at birth may enjoy being the receptors of penetrative sex, but experience gender dysphoria when that part of their body is referred to using a word that society and professional communities often associate with femaleness. An alternative that's becoming increasingly popular in trans and queer communities is front hole."

Women reduced to "front holes" by...the gay and trans alliance?

Front holes.

Front holes.

Front holes.

FRONT HOLES <https://t.co/L2iOEUJ0aA>

— Jack Murphy (@jackmurphylive) August 20, 2018